The Delaware County Historical Society has dedicated a gallery in the Meeker Homestead Museum as permanent Gallery for the American Indian history of Delaware County. The purpose of the Museum is to tell our history about Delaware County, and the purpose of the American Indian Gallery is to tell our visitors more specifically about the people who lived here prior to our early settlers. We envision not a permanent display, but space to create future exhibits to portray the latest findings as they unfold. We have made it our goal to tell stories about encounters with the early settlers and the tribes that were here as either inhabitants or that used the land for hunting. This is a challenging part to our research because much of the written history is told from the point of view of the early Euro-American settler. We can only note this in our exhibits, as there was not much available at this time from the perspective of the American Indian.

The story of the American Indians is a broad subject. It is easy to get cornered into a Twentieth Century way of portraying the American Indian, some-

President’s Message:

At the June OLHA board meeting we welcomed several new region representatives to the board. Julie Mayle of the Rutherford B. Hayes Presidential Center is a new Region 2 Representative. In Region 6 Nina Thomas from the Local History Center/Anti-Saloon League Museum/Westerville Public Library, is a new representative. Region 10’s new representative is Kyle Yoho of The Castle in Marietta. We are looking forward to energy and input Julie, Nina and Kyle will bring to our board.

While we welcome these three new region representatives we must say goodbye and thank you to three others. Mike Wilson’s work schedule prevented him from running again. We thank Mike for his help with the Region 2 meetings. Leslie Blankenship (Region 6) goes off the board after coming on the board to fill in an unexpired term and then served two full terms. For several of those years Leslie served as co-chair of the Education Committee, which means heading up the Annual Meeting, a tall task that Leslie filled admirably. Jim Geyer (Region 10) also came on as an appointment and went on to serve two full terms. Jim served as co-chair of the Advocacy Committee for a couple of years.

We also have a new trustee-at-large. Jack Blosser of Fort Ancient replaced Kate Smith who resigned. Kate served on the board as a region representative for several terms, as well as a trustee-at-large and will be missed, but we look forward to Jack’s contributions to the board and OLHA as a whole.

thing that we do not believe is always respectful. To properly portray the early history of an area, in our case Delaware County, the research should include not only the history of the American Indian, but of their ancestral beginnings going back thousands of years. I have begun to use the term, “Indigenous Peoples”, along with the term American Indian. The American Indian is the common classification of the tribes that inhabited the lands when the Colonial Americans came to the Ohio Lands. The Indigenous Peoples are those cultures, communities, and people who were here before colonial societies came to the North American continent. There are some archeologists who believe that the ancient peoples, like Hopewell, Cole and Adena, were the ancestors of the tribes of American Indians who were still here when our county founders came to central Ohio. This is still not proven, but it seems likely.

So how did we begin? We are fortunate to have had a fair number of American Indian artifacts donated during the early foundation of our historical society. Cataloguing and researching these objects with the help of researchers, both academic and hobbyists, have taken place. We had and continue to have the help of the Ohio History Connection in order to better understand our county’s part in the early American Indian history.

Our interest of presenting a local view of history is the main goal. We know that The Ohio History Connection’s museum covers the overall history of Ohio, but our focus is on telling the story at the local level.

Our physical displays, whether it be graphics on the wall or artifacts displayed in cases, are labeled with visitor friendly descriptions. We title the object or graphic on the labels. If it is an object, we give a brief description of what it is and for what it was used, giving a date when it was made or used. If it is a graphic, we provide the source and the date of the information. In our displays, we have catalogued and labeled many American Indian points and other tools.

In the center of the room, we designed a lighted kiosk in the center of the display cases. Descriptions of the various tribes present when the Colonial Americans arrived are on the kiosk. Our budget is limited for the purchases of new display equipment, which means we must be resourceful. The display cabinets for the American Indian gallery were donated by a local merchant and required little work to make them display ready. I used a material known as foam core covered with inexpensive muslin cloth for the case pads upon which to lay the artifacts.

To create interesting displays on a budget, we must do it as inexpensively as possible while making them look professional. I have found that you can get ideas by observing other sites that have larger budgets. Graphics, which include written descriptive text and illustrations, are all done by myself and by a sub-contracted artist. We have a local university that can print our larger graphics at a reasonable cost by simply giving them a flash drive or by sending our files to their site. Mounting services to mount those graphics are done by a local framer, mainly at cost. It is important to note to list the source of the information on your graphics. It’s always best to review “Fair Use” in anything you use in composing your graphics.

We also have illustrations done by a local artist on one wall that depict various scenes about the American Indians and encounters with the settlers. The stories are just below the pictures. Summer of 2018, we will have a model of a local Seneca village as researched and built by a local group of high school students. This partnership allows the community to be involved, thereby bringing more attention and visitors to our sites.
In October 2017, the American Association for State and Local History (AASLH) put the call out for volunteers to participate in the StEPs Enhancement Project. This initiative is aimed at reviewing and updating the Standards and Excellence Program – or StEPs – in preparation for its 10th Anniversary in 2019/2020. A lot has happened since the development of the current workbook, the pilot program, and the official launch in 2009. Just over 32 volunteers from across the local history, museums and archives, and humanities fields are working on each of the sections to reflect the advancements in technology and understanding of the community we seek to serve.

For those who are unfamiliar with StEPs, this is a self-paced self-assessment meant to familiarize small to medium sized history organizations of field standards. The workbook is divided into 6 sections: Mission/Vision/Governance, Audience, Interpretation, Stewardship of Collections, Stewardship of Historic Structures & Landscapes, and Management. Each section has a series of standards, self-assessment questions, and performance indicators. Across the country there are approximately 1,000 organizations enrolled in StEPs, and of those organizations 15 Ohio organizations have earned certificates. You may be interested to know that Ohio played an integral part in the creation of the workbook sections and in the pilot phase. These organizations included: the Oberlin Heritage Center, Stan Hywet Hall and Gardens, the Ohio History Connection, Canfield Historical Society, Clinton County Historical Society, National Cambridge Glass Museum, North Canton Historical Society, and the Sandusky Library/ Follett House Museum. With the number of Ohio organizations enrolled in StEPs, surpassing just the 15 who earned certificates, it is important to understand what the Enhancement Project means for those recently enrolled, who earned certificates, or those who are interested in enrolling in the program.

What Does the StEPs Enhancement Aim to Do?

After gathering information through member surveys and questionnaires of organizations enrolled in the current program, AASLH determined a set of seven areas that are of interest and concern to the history community.

- Digital Collections
- Finance, Fraud, and Transparency
- Fundraising
- Environmental Sustainability
- Creativity & Experimentation
- Diversity, Inclusion, Equity, and Accessibility
- Impact, Relevance, and Engagement

These topics form the basis for six teams who are made up of volunteers who are experts in their respective field. Andy Verhoff and I are two volunteers representing Ohio organizations in the process. Understandably, Andy is working on the Fundraising team, and I serve as the Co-Team Leader for the Impact, Relevance, and Engagement team. But what do all of these topics mean? Each team is tasked with reviewing each section and assessing how effectively it addresses each topic. For some teams, it could mean developing new content to weave into pre-existing standards and self-assessment questions. For others, it could mean just revising and updating some of the formatting and wording. The Impact, Relevance, and Engagement Team is looking at how each section maximizes and deploys institutional assets to engage people of all ages, backgrounds, and interests to encourage and inspire further education, interest, and engagement with history; provides context and facilitates connections between the past and the present by inspiring learners to examine, engage, and contribute to better understand their world through a historical lens; work collaboratively within the organization and communities to develop, maintain, and make accessible collections and programs, and foster an institutional culture that reflects the diversity of the people we serve.

How Will the Project Affect You?

Since the project strives for sustainability and continuity, AASLH has asked the Enhancement Project teams to have their final edits of the current workbook done by the AASLH Annual Meeting – so by late September-early October 2018. The workbook will then be proofread and the recommended additions or changes will be distributed to organizations currently enrolled in the program. If an organization earned certificates, or is in the process of completing a level in a section, this will not affect your progress or past certificates earned. But remember, the StEPs workbook is meant to be a capacity building tool, and ideally should be revisited as your organization matures. There will be a 12-18 month period when there will be two versions of the workbook in use, with the goal of having a complete switch over to the second edition being in 2020.

Stay tuned for more information since the teams are hard at work editing, developing content, and collaborating to ensure this essential tool for small to medium sized history organizations best serve the community.
Ohio has participated in every major United States conflict to date, World War I being no exception. Ohio contributed to the war effort in every way imaginable, from supplying soldiers and training them at Camp Sherman in Ross County, to manufacturing equipment and machinery at factories across the state, to Ohio women volunteering and stepping into the workforce, to families growing produce in “victory” gardens. Ohioans played an invaluable role in the Great War, and their experiences and sacrifices were shared by nearly all Americans.

As part of its effort to commemorate the World War I Centennial, the Ohio History Connection (OHC) is making World War I collections at Ohio institutions more accessible to teachers, students, and researchers through the Little Stories of the Great War: Ohioans in World War I project. Little Stories of the Great War builds upon the work of a previous planning grant funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) through which project staff identified World War I collections at Ohio institutions and compiled them in an online WWI union bibliography. During the current two-year implementation phase of the project, again funded by NEH, project staff are digitizing World War I collections from OHC’s own holdings, as well as fourteen cultural heritage institutions across Ohio.

All digitized content is available in the World War I in Ohio Collection on Ohio Memory, the statewide digital repository for primary source material documenting Ohio’s past. Collections selected for this project work together to tell the story of Ohio’s role in the Great War, both on the home front and overseas, and include photographic materials; posters and cartoons; letters, postcards and other correspondence; diaries and scrapbooks; military uniforms and accoutrements; and various military and organizational records. Users can learn about Camp Sherman by viewing regimental portraits or photographs showing various aspects of camp life, or by reading letters written by soldiers who trained there. Photographs, lantern slides, and stereographs show soldiers during gas, rifle, artillery, and trench construction training exercises. Wartime sentiments on the American home front are well documented by advertisements and posters encouraging Americans to ration food, purchase war bonds, and enlist in the Armed Forces. Recent additions and highlights include pamphlets published by the National Woman’s Liberty Loan Committee from the Mac-A-Cheek Foundation; Union County Local Draft Board records and a series of correspondence documenting a war widow’s attempts to receive her deceased husband’s war risk insurance benefits from Union County Historical Society; and a collection of American Issue cartoons using anti-German sentiment as leverage to push for wartime prohibition.

In addition to digitization, project staff are creating educator resources so that K-12 teachers can more effectively utilize the digital collection in the classroom. Lesson plans, resource guides, and web-based classroom activities are freely available on the ‘For Teachers’ page on Ohio Memory. Users can also connect directly with Ohioans’ World War I stories by transcribing handwritten documents on our newly-developed transcription tool at transcribe.ohiohistory.org! By transcribing letters, diaries, and more, you will help to reveal stories of Ohioans during World War I, making these first-hand accounts more accessible and easily discoverable. Completed transcriptions are added to that item’s record on Ohio Memory, making the original document full-text searchable. Transcription is a unique opportunity to make a personal connection with those who served, and experience a soldier or nurse’s journey through enlistment, training, deployment, and service abroad. A diverse range of experiences are represented in the materials available.

Twenty years ago, we learned from Rosenzweig and Thelen’s The Presence of the Past: Popular Uses of History in American Life that history museums were the most trusted source of history, outperforming history professors, history teachers, and even history books. Despite its methodological richness, what most of us recall from The Presence of the Past is that 80% of respondents thought museums were at the high end of a scale of trustworthiness, whereas the numbers for other sources were lower: grandparents, 69%; eyewitnesses to history, 64%; college history professors, 54%; high school history teachers, 36%; nonfiction books, 32%; and movies and television, 11%.

In a small way, we have revisited at least part of that question of trustworthiness, and this time included the Internet. In an AASLH 2018 broader population sampling, conducted by Wilkening Consulting, we asked 1,000 people about the trustworthiness of four history sources, and a generic “museums.” We found that 81% of respondents ranked history museums and historic sites as “absolutely” or “somewhat” trustworthy—making them more trustworthy than history textbooks and nonfiction, high school history teachers, and the internet as sources of history information.

The stability of this trust is encouraging, as that kernel from Rosenzweig and Thelen was a line I heard repeated at lots of conferences since the 1990s, and probably wielded myself at other gatherings. Assurance of being trusted was an idea that buoyed the public history community through some tough times: the culture wars of the 1990s and the rise and fall of postmodernism, when some on the right attacked the academy and some humanities scholars eroded history’s claim to objectivity and truth. Soul searching about the true role of museums and historic sites and the question of whether there were too many small museums. The economic collapse of 2008-2009. And the relentless rise of the Internet in our lives, offering new ways to access and share historical information, new ways to unite and divide people using historical interpretation, and new ways to educate as well as to deceive.

Likewise, it is good news that museums continue to be ranked as more trustworthy than the Internet, a component missing from The Presence of the Past that in some ways dated the study within a few years of publication. The AASLH study conducted online this month posed questions to 1,000 people. The table below summarizes the results: 81% of respondents declared history museums and historic sites trustworthy, and the same percentage responded as such for “museums,” whether or not they were history related. For history textbooks and nonfiction, it was 74%; high school history teachers, 65%; and for the “Internet (for history information),” it was 64%. While these rankings are not directly comparable to the Presence of the Past—“the Internet” was not an option to be selected on that survey conducted in the mid-1990s, and our survey methods differed significantly—they at least suggest that the trustworthiness of museums persists today.

While AASLH continues to seek funding for more comprehensive and ambitious research projects about perceptions of history and the state of the field, for now I’ll take the very good news that 81% of Americans still trust what they hear and see from history museums. In an age when truth, trust, news, and facts are challenged and counterchallenged by the minute, could we hope for more? Could the results be better than this?

It turns out that two other recent studies, released by the American Alliance of Museums (AAM), offer even more celebrate. AAM’s and Wilkening Consulting’s Museums and Public Opinion states that 97% of Americans believe museums are educational assets for their communities; 89% believe that museums contribute important economic benefits to their community; and 96% would think positively of their elected officials taking legislative action... to support museums. These are tremendously useful statistics for each of us to use when we talk with our boards, local funders, taxpayers, and political leaders. I know all of us planning to be at Museums Advocacy Day in Washington, D.C. later this month will be reminding Members of Congress that a 96% favorability rating means museums are an issue with no downside.

How can they resist? Especially after we tell them about AAM’s other study, Museums as Economic Engines, which, among many other findings, shows that museums directly employ more than double the number of people as does the professional sports industry. Our institutions give a big boost to local and national economies: “for every $100 of economic activity created by museums, an additional $220 is created in other sectors of the U.S. economy as a result of supply chain and employee expenditure impacts.” Job creators, engines of the economy, and highly trusted by constituents—history museums should be the envy of Senators and Representatives!

Hopewell Ceremonial Earthworks World Heritage Nomination News
Jennifer Aultman, World Heritage Project Coordinator, Ohio History Connection

Ohio sites have moved one step closer to World Heritage! On May 25, 2018, the U.S. Department of the Interior formally authorized Ohio’s Hopewell Ceremonial Earthworks as the United States’ next nomination to be prepared for World Heritage List consideration by the World Heritage Committee.

The World Heritage List recognizes cultural and natural sites of global importance such as the Taj Mahal, the Great Wall of China and the Statue of Liberty. An international treaty signed by 193 countries including the United States establishes the list.

The Hopewell Ceremonial Earthworks nomination includes 2,000 year old American Indian earthworks sites in central and southern Ohio: Newark Earthworks’ Octagon and Great Circle in Licking County, and Fort Ancient in Warren County (Ohio History Connection sites); Seip Earthworks, Mound City, Hopeton Earthworks, High Bank Works and Hopewell Mound Group sites at Hopewell Culture National Historical Park in Ross County (National Park Service Sites). If successful, they would collectively be the first World Heritage site in Ohio. There are 23 such sites in the United States and 1073 across the globe. As the World Heritage Ohio steering committee, a group of Ohioans has been working toward inscription of the Hopewell Ceremonial Earthworks nomination for more than 10 years.

The UNESCO World Heritage Committee votes each summer on new additions to the list. It is anticipated that the earliest the Ohio nomination could be considered for World Heritage status is summer 2021. The World Heritage Ohio team is looking forward to sharing further updates as the nomination progresses!
The Inclusive History Museum

Thanks to an IMLS National Leadership Grant, the Naperville Heritage Society (Naperville, Illinois) is spearheading multiple-phases of research on the inclusive history museum.

We are thrilled to help them out by spreading the word so that your organization, and our field, can benefit from this important work. Additionally, AASLH will be the repository for this benchmark data, benefiting the field in the future.

Please help by taking the Inclusive History Organizational Practice Benchmarking Survey so that we, as a field, can benchmark the 2019 state of inclusive practice. Before you begin the survey:

- It will require about 20 minutes; please block out that time
- You can download a copy of the survey in advance, which may speed up the process by allowing you to track down any answers you don’t have at your fingertips

Click here to begin the Inclusive History Organizational Practice Benchmarking Survey

Free Research Opportunity: Audiences and Inclusive History. This is an additional, second survey, for your visitors, that will give you insight into how they may respond to the inclusion of different viewpoints, new interpretations of history, and the presentation of a more inclusive history of your community or site. The survey will include:

- History and its relevance
- Meaning making in history museums and historic sites
- Trust and history organizations
- Presentation of multiple viewpoints
- Questions of neutrality or taking a stand
- Revisionist history, and what that means

History organizations that are selected to participate in this additional research opportunity agree to send out an email blast to their contact list (as well as any other methods they choose) in September 2018. Each participating organization will receive their confidential results in late fall/early winter and will have an opportunity to discuss those results directly with Susie Wilkening, the researcher for this project.

To volunteer to participate in this research, please complete the Inclusive History Organizational Practice Benchmarking Survey, and indicate your interest at the end of the survey.

The overall results from all phases of research will be shared with the field beginning in 2019. If you have any questions about this work, please contact Susie Wilkening at susie@wilkeningconsulting.com.

Upcoming Workshops from the Conservation Center for Art & Historic Artifacts (CCAHA)

Workshop V: Preservation Planning and Environmental Management

A Preservation Plan is an essential document that helps an institution carefully chart a 5-10 year course for the preservation of collections artifacts. Without planning, it can be nearly impossible to effectively budget staff time and resources for collections care.

In this workshop, participants will receive guidance on how to create a Preservation Plan. Participants will study sample Plans and practice establishing goals, objectives, and strategies to develop an effective Plan.

- Thursday, July 19 at University of Pikeville - Allara Library, Pikeville, KY
- Monday, July 23 at West Virginia University - Downtown Library, Morgantown, WV

Workshop VI: Emergency Planning and Preparedness

Thoughtful preparation for an emergency or disaster is crucial to safeguarding collections. The creation of an Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan is vital to the survival of an institution’s artifacts.

In this workshop, participants will learn about tools for developing an Emergency Response and Preparedness Plan and the basics of collections salvage. There will be an opportunity to practice hands-on salvage procedures by rescuing a variety of materials from water.

Participants will learn how to train their staff and fellow employees to ensure that in the event of an emergency, the Emergency Response and Preparedness Plan is efficiently and effectively followed.

- Friday, July 20 at University of Pikeville - Allara Library, Pikeville, KY
- Tuesday, July 24 at West Virginia University - Downtown Library, Morgantown, WV

We’re looking forward to seeing you on Wednesday and Thursday, August 1-2, 2018, in Columbus, Ohio, for #CD-MUG2018, the annual CONTENTdm Users Group meeting at the gorgeous Columbus Metropolitan Library.

Registration:
OCLC’s generous sponsorship makes it possible for this conference to be free to all CONTENTdm users. Attendance is capped at 100, so register now at https://sites.google.com/view/cdmug2018/registration.

Keynote:
Digital Library Service Innovations in an Age of Skepticism.

Karen Estlund, associate dean for Technology and Digital Strategies for Penn State Libraries. Estlund will review innovative and emerging practices in digital libraries in the context of this skepticism. Implications on the relationship with notions of linked data, bias in description, block-chain, and universal design will be discussed. The role of community, membership organizations, and partnerships may both support and challenge our structural information systems, in terms of collections, metadata, systems, and standards for interoperability. In this, digital library services have the power to address the gap in trust and to foster dialogue.

Workshop:
IIIF & CONTENTdm Customization Workshop

The International Image Interoperability Framework (IIIF), is an industry standard that is unleashing the ability for digital collections to be shared for research in innovative ways. Your OCLC CONTENTdm site includes IIIF Image and Presentation APIs so you can take advantage of new viewers and visualizations of your unique content or build one yourself! Come to this workshop to learn about IIIF and the impact it can have for your digital collections, and learn about the new customization framework for CONTENTdm, then take a deep dive trying out IIIF in real time! Bring your laptop and work through adding a timeline exhibit to a CONTENTdm site (provided to you for the workshop) with guidance from Dave Collins, lead software architect for CONTENTdm, Jeff Mixter, software engineer in OCLC Research, and Shane Huddleston, the CONTENTdm Product Manager. 30 minute lecture/120 minute hands-on workshop.

The program is filling up with exciting presentations, such as Creating a Digital Hub with CONTENTdm, Crowdsourced Transcription, Care and Handling During Scanning, Customizing your Responsive Site, Case Studies in Preserving Master Files, Preparing Metadata for the DPLA, (Re)Selecting CONTENTdm for an Institutional Repository, Spinning the Tires on the Revs Digital Library, Using Canva to Customize Collection Landing Pages, Using Wikibase to Manage Linked Data for Digital Collections, and more.

Venue: The Columbus Metropolitan Library’s Main Library is located in downtown. The Metro Library system has been named in the top 4 US library systems numerous times, won Library of the Year in 2010, and is one of the most used library systems in the country. The Main reopened after extensive renovation in 2016. All meeting rooms include robust wifi, and modern A/V. The back patio of the library (lunch spot!) backs up to the Topiary Park, a living sculptural interpretation of Georges Seurat’s painting, A Sunday Afternoon on the Isle of La Grand Jatte.

More meeting details will appear as they develop at the meeting website: https://sites.google.com/view/cdmug2018/

History Fund Grant Application Now Available!

Since March 2013, the History Fund grant program of the Ohio History Connection has made $598,000 in grants to 63 organizations across Ohio. The History Fund invites you to join this distinguished group! Apply for History Fund grant at www.ohiohistory.org/historyfund.

The application deadline is September 5, 2018 (by 11:59 pm).

The History Fund application for the 2017-2018 grant cycle mirrors application forms from previous years, but contains a few tweaks in response to comments from last year’s applicants. This year, we clarified wording on a few of the questions in the narrative section of the application - that’s it!

Also note that the "How To" History Fund webinars, once found on the History Fund’s website, may have been off line as of June 25 because the Ohio History Connection changed webinar provider service. We will attempt to re-post the webinars in the new format as quickly as possible.

The Ohio History Connection will announce grant recipients at the annual advocacy event Statehood Day, scheduled February 27, 2019. Between the application deadline of September 5, 2018 and February 2019, History Fund grant projects undergo a rigorous review involving subject area experts at the Ohio History Connection and a panel of outside experts, who make the final grant recommendations. Local History Services contacts applicants regarding the final status of the applications in February, in advance of the public announcement at Statehood Day.

This spring, the History Fund presented grant-writing workshops at the Region 4 meetings, as well as at annual conference of the Ohio Museums Association and at a meeting of the Westlake Historical Society, near Cleveland. At each, we emphasized that if would be applicants have questions they should call or write. We’re here to help!

For more information, contact Andy Verhoff, Ohio History Fund grant coordinator, 614.297.2341 or averhoff@ohiohistory.org, or visit the History Fund’s website. Good luck!
